Fragmenting the Principle of Reservations

The majority judgment of the Supreme Court favouring the 10% reservation quota for economically weaker sections (EWS) may be considered by some as a welcome step on the grounds that it addresses the question of economic disadvantage. It is needless to mention that such a judgment takes into consideration only one component, that is, material disadvantage suffered by some members from the categories, which hitherto did not fall within the purview of any reservation category.

The Electoral Crisis of 1801: Jefferson's First Inaugural

Terry Newell
Chapter
67 Accesses

Abstract

On the snowy morning of Wednesday, February 11, 1801, Vice President Thomas Jefferson, as president of the Senate, began to announce the electoral vote for the bitterly contested election of 1800. The crowded Senate chamber, barely finished the previous November, the only part of the Capitol constructed thus far, offered the setting for a constitutionally routine and simple task being exercised in anything but a routine and simple situation. He knew the result, as did everyone else in the chamber, before the ballots were opened: Jefferson-73, Aaron Burr-73, John Adams-65, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney-64, and John Jay-1.

Indium arsenide quantum dots: an alternative to lead-based infrared emitting nanomaterials

Abstract

Colloidal quantum dots (QDs) emitting in the infrared (IR) are promising building blocks for numerous photonic, optoelectronic and biomedical applications owing to their low-cost solution-processability and tunable emission. Among them, lead- and mercury-based QDs are currently the most developed materials. Yet, due to toxicity issues, the scientific community is focusing on safer alternatives. In this regard, indium arsenide (InAs) QDs are one of the best candidates as they can absorb and emit light in the whole near infrared spectral range and they are RoHS-compliant, with recent trends suggesting that there is a renewed interest in this class of materials. This review focuses on colloidal InAs QDs and aims to provide an up-to-date overview spanning from their synthesis and surface chemistry to post-synthesis modifications. We provide a comprehensive overview from initial synthetic methods to the most recent developments on the ability to control the size, size distribution, electronic properties and carrier dynamics. Then, we describe doping and alloying strategies applied to InAs QDs as well as InAs based heterostructures. Furthermore, we present the state-of-the-art applications of InAs QDs, with a particular focus on bioimaging and field effect transistors. Finally, we discuss open challenges and future perspectives.
